

Teachable Moments

It all started with my almost 3 year old granddaughter and me sitting at the kitchen table. I had an envelope full of pictures of flowers that a catalog company had sent me for her to look at. We started looking at the first picture and she told me what color the flower was. Taking her lead, we talked about the color of each of the others. We talked about the tall ones and the small ones, the big round ones and the tiny little ones. Appreciation can be learned and memories made with the simplest of items. My favorite response from her was “this one is very beautiful, grandma.” Cheri Kessen
